PREFACE

The Standard Index of Short Stories is the result of a long-felt need on my part for an adequate reference book to which librarians can turn in order to locate the whereabouts of short stories published in American magazines, but not reprinted in book form. Although the short story is the most characteristic and popular form of American literature, it is a curious fact that the overwhelming majority of short stories, including many of the best that are published each year, are not reprinted afterwards. For many years I have had the experience of being unable to answer from fifteen to twenty inquiries a day on the part of readers who came to the Periodical Department of the Boston Public Library and sought without avail to trace a magazine short story. Such inquiries were so continuous and insistent that I began compiling for the use of the Boston Public Library a manuscript card index of short stories published in American magazines since 1899. As the work grew, I began to realize of what value it would prove to other libraries, and it was determined that this index should be published in book form.

The Standard Index of Short Stories is an index, by author and by title, under one alphabet, with many cross references, of all the short stories published in twenty-four American magazines from January, 1900, to December, 1914, inclusive — that is, from the beginning of the period when the magazine short story became an art with a large American public to the beginning in 1915 of the series of annual volumes edited by Mr. Edward J. O'Brien, of The Best Short Stories published in American magazines during the year. In the Yearbook section of this series, Mr. O'Brien indexes all the short stories published in these magazines for the years beginning with 1915.

The Standard Index contains more than 35,000 entries, comprising the work of more than 3,000 authors, and a number of the magazines which it indexes — notably The Saturday Evening Post — do not publish an annual index, and have not been indexed before in any form.

This index should be useful to libraries, editors, magazine and book publishers, motion-picture producers, short-story writers, and other literary workers. Colleges which offer courses in short-story writing should find it a means of tracing material suggested to students for illustrative purposes. It should also prove useful to schools of oratory.

I shall be grateful to librarians and others for suggestions and corrections that may tend to increase the future usefulness of the volume. Such communications may be addressed to me at the Boston Public Library, and will be gratefully acknowledged.

FRANCIS J. HANNIGAN.
